

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

ALTERNATIVE NEWS ORGANIZATION INUNDATED
AFTER BREAKING STORY OF CORPORATE
CORRUPTION BY COCA-COLA

Guerrilla News Network Special Report Brings Attention to Unique Copyright Infringement Case Against Leading Soft Drink Manufacturer

New York, July, 16—After filing the final installation to a Special Report entitled Coca Karma, the Guerrilla News Network (GNN) - a web-based alternative news organization – was inundated with curious viewers and investors last week. Interest in the GNN's Coca-Karma exposé peaked after the story appeared on the group's web site and was then introduced to several Internet newsgroups, including Yahoo.com and MotleyFool.com.

The report exposes the facts of a $4 billion copyright infringement lawsuit filed against Coca-Cola in Chicago by an independent marketing consultant named Bob Kolody, who claims he owns the copyright to an image that has been used on Coke Classic cans since 1993. Court documents reveal that Coke inexplicably failed to renew their copyright on a very famous image that appeared on their first soda can in 1961: the 'contour bottle on the Coke can' image. When Coke failed to renew the 1961 copyright (as they must do after 28 years) Kolody, became the de facto rights holder because he had created a derivative work of the image for his pitch with Simon Marketing (Coke's ad agency).

The incredible story is corroborated by exhibits, court records and attorney correspondences that allege vast corruption in the federal court system, including court records and affidavits that accuse the federal judge in the case (Blanche Manning) of judicial perjury and link her to high-level Chicago mob boss, William Cellini.

Coca-Cola has refused to comment until litigation has ended on the case.

You can find Coca-Karma at: www.GuerrillaNews.com/cocakarma